Should mobile phones

school?

It's not the technology that's bad; it's the way people use it.

Katsumi (15)

People worry that mobiles are a big distraction at school, but I disagree – they can be really creative in the classroom.

While I was studying English in London last summer, we used our mobiles a lot in class. For example, we could use dictionary apps []

we could ask Siri questions. That was a great way to improve our pronunciation because Siri didn't understand if we said things incorrectly! We also did internet [] projects and students [] documents on the cloud. And we didn't take notes while the teacher was writing – we just [] On Monday morning, when the teacher asked 'What did you do at the weekend?', we showed pictures and videos and recorded our answers.
