The rabbit returned to the others. They spoke in low voices. Then the big rabbit hopped back to Flit. He said they would help the squirrels. He told Flit that when animals forget why they are enemies, they should be friends that when animals forget why they are enemies, they should be friends.

Flit sneaked across the creek to Rabbit Village later that day. A group of rabbits saw him coming. Flit stopped a few feet from them. He took a deep breath. Then he asked if they would help the squirrels get ready for the storm.

A great storm was coming. Crow had warned the forest animals. He said the wind would bend trees. It would snap the branches.
