Modals of deduction and speculation with past participle

MUST HAVE-Deduction about something that has happened. You must have left your book in the classroom, you haven't been anywhere else and it's not in the car.

CAN'T HAVE-Deduction about something that didn't happen in the past based on present evidence. *You can't have seen Mark's sister. She lives in Canada and hasn't been to England for ages.

SHOULD HAVE-Something was desirable or needed but didn't happen. *I should have called you but I forgot.

NEEDN'T HAVE-Opposite to 'should have'. Something not necessary was done. You needn't have bought more potatoes. We've got plenty.

MIGHT/MAY/COULD HAVE-Something was possible in the past but we're not sure. *I think I saw your sister at the cinema last night but I may/might/could be wrong because it was very dark.

The perfect infinitive with modals

MODAL VERB + PERFECT INFINITIVE ((TO) HAVE + PAST PARTICIPLE)

The perfect infinitive is often used after the modal auxiliary verbs to talk about unreal situations

COULD HAVE: I could have bought a nice house if I had saved enough money.

SHOULD HAVE: You should have told me that before but you didn't. You shouldn't have kept the secret.

WOULD HAVE: I would have gone to that private university if I had had enough money.

NEEDN'T HAVE: We needn't have waited for him (but we did).

Sometimes the perfect infinitive can express certainty.

*She should have arrived home by now.

*They will have arrived home by now. They left so long ago.
