The Seasons

The four seasons are caused by the Earth changing relationship to the Sun, but before we get into the details, let's have a quick look at the Earth.

Earth's axis is an imaginary line that runs through the centre of the Earth from top to bottom. Earth makes a complete spin around this line every day. The equator is the imaginary line that runs through the middle of the Earth, splitting it into Northern and Southern Hemispheres.

The Earth orbits the Sun every 365 days and while it does this, it also spins on its axis every 24 hours. Because the Earth's axis is slightly tilted, each part of the planet is getting a different amount of light. This difference creates the seasons. The hemisphere tilted towards the Sun will have more sunlight, it will be summer; the hemisphere leaning away from the Sun will have less sunlight, it will be winter. Areas north and south of the equator have opposite seasons. When it's winter in the north it's summer in the south. Areas near the equator aren't affected by this tilt, they get the same amount of sunlight all year round. This is why they do not have four seasons like the rest of the world, they are warm all year round or they just have two seasons, a wet one and a dry one.
