THE POWER OF COMMUNICATION

When I was younger I hated languages. My dad spoke several and was convinced I had inherited his ability. I barely passed a GCSE in German and promised myself to concentrate on English from then on.

It wasn't until I started thinking about my gap year that I considered learning a second language while I was away. I eventually chose Chile and, to my surprise, after being there for four months I was addicted to learning Spanish.

I was working in a school for disabled children in a class of six. Only two children could speak, and neither of them well, but I realized slowly that every child could communicate. Some of them used physical signs and movements to express themselves. Others used their voices – they made noises which changed depending on how they felt. They even 'talked' to each other, having arguments and friendly chats like anyone else. Every child in that room had a strong personality, likes and dislikes, desires and fears that they communicated every day, without saying a single sentence. Slowly, I learned not only Spanish but the language of every one of the children I cared for. It was inspirational to see these children whose disability gave them a good excuse to not learn, chatting with each other and myself easily. I had been making excuses for not trying all these years and here were a group of disabled eight-year-olds showing me how important communication really is. It made me want to learn Spanish so that I could express my personality in the way that they had learned to do.

And so, every day I would go to work for 8 hours, come home and spend my evenings studying Spanish. I loved the thrill of recognizing a new word. When I arrived I spoke nothing but when I left I could happily have a conversation. I changed my degree from History to Spanish language. My life was going in a completely different direction, and I'm sure I'm happier than I would have been if I hadn't changed course. That is what I learned from those children – that dedication to communication can open doors like nothing else. Doors to friendship and happiness, to excitement and adventure.

Just don't tell my dad that he was right....

I need to work both 4 independently/ independent and 5 like/ as a team. People sometimes confuse 6 being/ having your own boss with working 7 shifts/ part-time. My job is very much full-time. That means I 8 have/ work a lot of pressure, but I also have control 9 over/ on my own time. I can work when I like, provided I get the job done. And I need to do that to have a good 10 money / salary of course!

2- Read the vocabulary box and Luke and Megan's story. Match the highlighted phrases with the definitions.

Hi, we're Luke and Megan and we're both unschooled! Our mum 'came up with' the plan when she got a new job abroad. She wanted us to 'keep up with' some sort of learning. We decided that the experience of unschooling would 'make up for' the classes we missed because we would be learning in the real world. We can choose what we do every day. Sounds cool? Sure, but it doesn't suit everybody. Mum persuaded us to use the time away to 'catch up on' stuff we really enjoy. As I'm fascinated by bees and into photography, I decided to write my own blog and Megan's learning Chinese. We never 'run out of' ideas for what we're going to do next. Luckily we 'get on with' each other. If we didn't it would be awful.
