

When we breathe, air moves into the _____ where it is warmed and moistened. Dust and microorganisms are trapped by _____ in this area. The air then travels down the _____ and into the _____. From here it moves into the windpipe which is known as the _____. The windpipe splits into two tubes called the _____ which carry air to the lungs. These tubes split into finer tubes called _____ where there are bunches of air sacs called _____ surrounded by tiny blood vessels called _____. Oxygen is pumped into the capillaries and carried to the heart where it is used for _____.

The _____ muscles between the ribs are used to help us breathe. The dome-shaped sheet of muscle that separates the chest and abdominal cavities are called _____.

