One day, a grasshopper met some ants. They were carrying food to their home under the ground. "Good day" said the grasshopper. "Isn't it a fine day?" The ants didn't stop to talk. The grasshopper watched them. Then he said: "It's a lovely day. The sun is shining. The birds are singing. Why do you work so hard? Now it is time to sit in the sun." "No, it isn't" said the ants. "Now is the time to work. We aren't lazy. When winter comes, we won't find any food. We must collect our food now and store it for the winter."

The grasshopper laughed at the ants and lay in the sun listening to the birds.

Weeks and months went by. The days became cold. The wind blew and it rained. Soon snow covered the fields. It was winter. Under the ground, the ants were warm and happy. They had all the food they needed. The grasshopper jumped from place to place. He was looking for a warm, dry home. He was thin, cold and hungry. He went to the ants and asked for some food. "Oh no!" said the ant. "You sang all summer, so in the winter you'll starve."
