Christopher Reeve 1952–2004

You have probably heard of Superman, but have you heard of Christopher Reeve? Christopher Reeve was the actor who played Superman in four Hollywood movies between the years 1978-1987. Reeve's first Superman movie was a great success. Millions of people around the world went to see it. Reeve became an international superstar.

In 1995 the world was shocked when Reeve fell off his horse during a riding competition. This terrible accident left him paralyzed – he could not move any part of his body from the neck down. He was in a wheelchair and was connected to a breathing machine. He needed help with everyday tasks: eating, washing and getting dressed. He couldn't even turn the pages of a book.

However, Reeve, who could do so little for himself did so much for others. For example, Reeve collected money to open a research center* that makes the life of paralyzed people around the world better. He also wrote a book called "Still Me", a funny and hopeful story about his life. To this day, this book helps paralyzed people make the most of their lives.

Reeve's life came to an end at the early age of 52. His courage, strength and care for others are still remembered. Christopher Reeve really was a super man.
