- (1) Life in Italy 50 years ago [X]
- (2) My grandma's life as a teenager [X]
- (3) Different times, different lifestyles [X]

	When my grandma was a teenager in a small town in Italy her life was very different from the way my life is today. She walked five kilometres to school every day and after school she always helped her mother around the house. She didn't have much time to see her friends. There was no TV so in the evening the family listened to the radio in the living room of their big house. She had a large family: five brothers and three sisters! She also had lots of uncles, aunts and cousins. And on Sundays, after going to church, everybody went to my grandma's house for a big lunch. She had an uncle that was really funny. Everybody liked him, and she still has a picture of him on her bedside table. She loved her life very much because it was simple but good. My life today is completely different. Every morning my dad drives me to school. It only takes us ten minutes to get there if the traffic is fine. I only help my parents do the housework at weekends because I have ballet classes or I meet my friends in the afternoon during the week. After dinner I usually go to my bedroom and watch TV or chat with friends on Skype. I couldn't live without my LED TV or my notebook! I don't have a radio in my room; I just listen to music on my iPod. I have only one brother and all my cousins live in distant cities so I rarely see them. My flat is quite big and comfortable but I would like to live in a house. Anyway, my life's good and I can't complain!
