Articles of Confederation w visual supports

Directions: Read the text and answer the questions by putting an "x" in the box in front of the correct answer.

The First Continental Congress met in Philadelphia in September 1774 to send a protest to King George III of England over the Intolerable Acts. When the Second Continental Congress met again in Philadelphia in May 1775, the first battle of the Revolutionary War had already taken place in Massachusetts. This congress authorized the Continental Army in June 1775 and appointed George Washington as the leader of the army. The Second Continental Congress issued the Declaration of Independence in July 1776 and commissioned delegates to write a document organizing a government that would speak for all thirteen colonies called the United States of America. This governing document was called the Articles of Confederation.

The Articles of Confederation were written and revised by delegates to the Second Continental Congress from the colonies between June 1776 and November 1777. Once approved by the Congress the Articles of Confederation were sent to each colony (state) to be ratified or approved by the state legislature. The Articles of Confederation were finally approved by all of the states on March 1, 1781. After ratification the Congress was called the Congress of the Confederation. The Articles of Confederation did not give much power to the central government and did not govern the country well. They were replaced by the U.S. Constitution in June 1788.
