

Use the Relative Clauses: Where/Which/Who/Whose to fill in the blanks of the story below.

There once was an old woman _____ lived in a small cottage in the woods. She loved to go walking _____ the baby deer and the antelope played. One day, during her evening walk, she spotted a deer _____ leg was injured. The old woman ran to the deer and sat beside it. "Oh honey, I will help you." She ran back to her home and got the wheelbarrow to carry the deer with. "Oh sweet one, _____ did this to you? Was it the farmer on the neighboring farm? Is it the young boy across the street?" The old woman loaded the deer into the wheel barrow and carted him back. She arrived at the house, out of breath and aching. "Now, _____ can I put you?" She pondered. The house in _____ she lives is too small. The shed _____ the tools are is too cold. "I guess you will go in the cellar, my friend." The Old woman carried the small deer down the stairs and placed him on a blanket by the furnace. "You will be warm here." She climbed the stairs and began walking to the house _____ the boy lived. There was nobody home. She turned and walked to the farm _____ belongs to the farmer. That is when the snow started. Shivering, the old woman knocked on the farmers door. The farmer walked slowly to the door and opened it. Without waiting a moment, the old woman showed him the arrow, "_____ ARROW IS THIS!?" She shouted. The farmers face turned bright pink as he took the arrow. "It is mine. _____ did you find it?" He asked. The old woman frowned and shook her head. "You should ask _____ I found it in, you old bugger." She picked up her dress and began walking home. Thus begins the story of Snow Whites grandmother and why animals are drawn to her.
