On Saturday morning Richard, Judy and Tom were playing cricket in the back garden. It was their favourite pastime at the weekend. Having two older brothers meant that Judy had become a very good player over the years. The boys considered her their equal and gave her no special treatment. Judy was aware of this and proud of her achievement. She had earned their respect, which meant a lot to her. Joe came out to the back garden and joined the children in their game. A few minutes later, he said to them playfully, 'I need three volunteers.'

'That's really funny, Dad,' said Judy ironically. 'What do you want us to do?' 'Well,' said Joe, 'I was in the attic yesterday afternoon looking for something and saw how messy the place has become, so I was...' 'Oh Dad,' interrupted Richard, 'that'll take hours. I have planned something for today.' 'Don't get upset over nothing,' said Joe. 'The three of you can clean it up in no time. Anyway, I'm not asking for a perfect job. Just put some things in order. Besides, when was the last time I asked you for a favour?'

'OK,' said Richard, 'we'll get the job done.'
 'Can we keep any hidden treasures we find in there?' asked Tom jokingly.
 'Off you go now, wise guy,' said his father. When the children got into the attic, they realised it was not an easy job. No one had tidied the place for many years.
 'Oh no!' said Tom. 'We're going to spend the whole day here!'
 'No, we aren't,' said Judy. 'We'll first move these trunks and boxes to the back wall. That will give us some free space near the door and we'll be able to move around more easily.'
 The two boys agreed with their sister and got down to work.
 As Richard was moving a box, he suddenly saw a strange package behind a trunk.

The package was wrapped in a colourful cloth and covered in dust. Richard was curious and decided to open it.
 'Hey guys, come and see this,' said Richard.
 'What is it?' asked Judy and quickly added, 'It looks like an Aboriginal decoration.'
 'Of course it's Aboriginal,' said Tom, 'but what's it doing here?'
 'I don't know,' said Richard. 'It looks very old. Someone must have put it here a long time ago.'
 'But who?' asked Judy. 'Whose was it?'
 Meanwhile, Joe was in his study working on the computer. Sonya came in with a cup of coffee in her hand. She approached her husband and asked, 'Where are the children, Joe?

It's very quiet for a Saturday morning.'
 'They're busy at the moment,' he answered.
 'Oh, doing what?' asked Sonya. 'I can't see them in the back garden.'
 'They're upstairs cleaning the attic,' said Joe.
 'I was up there yesterday and saw how messy it was, so I asked them to clean it up a bit.'

Sonya put down her cup of coffee, looked at Joe and said, 'But Joe, what if Richard finds the you-know-what? Have you forgotten?'
 'Oh dear,' said Joe, 'it's been such a long time ... I'm afraid I did forget. What do I do now?'
 'There's nothing you can do,' said Sonya. 'Just hope they don't find it.'
