§1. Minutes before the start of a British Grand Prix in August, the drivers' faces are grave with concentration. Fans are screaming. Squeezed into his driving seat, Nelson Jones is pulling on a pair of tight black gloves. No question where he's expecting to finish: 'First,' he says. At the start signal, with a burst of engine noise, the drivers move quickly to the first turn.

§2. It all sounds a lot like a Formula One car race, but there's a difference — Nelson is thirteen years old, and he's racing in a go-kart. What could be seen as child's-play is in fact the first step for young talent to move into professional race cars, because it introduces them to the essential basics such as finding the racing line, concentration and how to compete on the track. That track record makes karting a must for youngsters keen to make racing their life's ambition.

§3. Nelson Jones has actually been racing since he was eight years old. 'When my son Nelson showed us how gifted he was with racing, even at an incredibly young age, I knew we had to do something,' Nelson's father says. 'Racing can be really dangerous and it gets expensive, but when I had the opportunity to buy him his first official kart, I rushed to do it.'

§4. After taking part in three or four local races in Britain, in which he won first place, Nelson decided that he would go for it and have a crack at his first international Grand Prix in Germany, which he won as well. Nelson now travels all over Britain and Europe to take part in races. The interest he showed in racing was not via the usual exposure to video games. 'We lived near a small karting racetrack and I became fascinated — I couldn't stop talking about it. One day, as we were driving past, I made my father stop the car so I could have a better look at the karts flying by. I saw so many people, including kids my own age, and I took a liking to it straight away.'

§5. Nelson eventually got his chance to try it out. The family hired an instructor for amateurs to teach Nelson, who took him as far as the age of twelve. The instructor then informed Nelson's father it was time to look for someone more qualified. Perhaps it is Nelson's good fortune in having always been expertly advised that has made him so relaxed about forcing the pressures of an international racing circuit. But what is it like to be so young with a schedule fully booked with races, and all eyes watching him, expecting victory after victory? 'It's good for me, as I know what I need to be doing. The public's expectations help me focus and concentrate so I can race at my highest level.'

A37. According to the text, karting is important for future Formula One drivers because

- 1) it helps them decide whether racing is really their life's ambition.
- 2) it teaches them some of the skills they need to race professionally.
- 3) it shows if young drivers have enough talent to become professionals.

A38. How did Nelson's father react to his son's interest in racing?

- 1) He thought Nelson's talent must be supported.
- 2) He realised this hobby would be very expensive.
- 3) He believed Nelson was too young for racing.

A39. Nelson became interested in kart racing

- 1) because his father often talked about it.
- 2) because of his exposure to video games.
- 3) after watching other children doing it.

A40. What does the writer suggest about Nelson's first race instructor?

- 1) He lost confidence in his teaching ability.
- 2) He was not qualified to teach professionals.
- 3) He wanted to coach someone more qualified.

When you first meet Beatrice Smyth, you are struck by her wonderful smile and her well-toned muscles. 'Performing on stage is one of the most exciting experiences possible. All the nerves and fright you feel in the wings just melt away when you face the audience. Although you are aware of a sea of faces watching you, this is not what you concentrate on. (A43) ..... If you focus on this, then your dancing will look natural and unforced.'

So how did Beatrice get started? 'I began taking ballet lessons in a local school when I was six. My teachers felt I had talent but after 11 years of ballet, I realised I wanted to do something different (A44) ..... That was it! I had never seen dancing like this before and immediately decided it was for me. The following year I was offered a place at a London contemporary dance school where I completed a three-year course.'

Today Beatrice is a permanent member of the Charmed Circle Dance Company. But was it a difficult transition from studies to career? 'I was warned that the competition would be fierce. (A45) ..... Applying for even the smallest part meant auditioning with dozens of others. Finally, I was lucky enough to be offered a trial period of one year with Charmed Circle, even though it meant working without pay. It was an extremely difficult period, as you can imagine.'

'I could have been tempted to join other dance companies on a temporary basis doing one-off paid performances. But this would have meant missing out on the chance to become part of the regular line-up of what is now one of Britain's leading contemporary dance companies.' (A46) ..... But Beatrice's ultimate ambition is to make it to America, where the ideas behind contemporary dance were first pioneered and developed.

When asked about what it takes to become a dancer, Beatrice didn't hesitate. 'You have to love what you're doing, you have to keep pushing yourself to the limit and you have to be slightly mad, too (A47) ..... Most dancers will tell you how physically painful daily training can be. You also have to be extremely self-motivated!'

So what does Beatrice particularly enjoy about contemporary dance? 'Well, for one thing, contemporary movements are so different from those in other types of dance. In ballet, for example, the movements are strictly structured and you have to stick to them. In contemporary dance, however, the movements are more expressive and each have individual meanings in themselves. (A48) ..... This makes them very moving experiences both to perform and to watch.'
