

The Balkan Express

The first person I saw as soon as I returned from my holidays was my grandfather. He opened the front door for me and stood there, looking me up and down in amazement.

'Whatever's the matter with you?' he asked.

I went straight into the living-room and sank exhausted into an armchair. I was hard put to explain my appearance. I was pale, unshaven, dirty and tired out after my journey.

'I've been travelling on the Balkan Express,' I mumbled weakly, 'and I haven't eaten a thing for over eighteen hours. As I didn't get a seat, I spent most of my time in the corridor where I was nearly trampled to death.'

'The Balkan Express!' my grandfather exclaimed. 'When I was a young man, that was a wonderful train. There was a permanent dining-car and you could get some of the best food and wines in Europe. I can even remember a time when a gypsy orchestra was employed to play to the passengers during meal-times.' He looked me up and down again, then added with a sigh, 'You couldn't beat the old Balkan Express for comfort.'

'Times have changed, grandfather,' I said sadly.

'Judging from your appearance, my boy,' he answered, 'they've changed for the worse. Now you go and have a nice hot bath, and I'll get you something warm to drink.'
