There have been a lot of famous cheats in sporting history, even in the most famous sporting event of them all, the Olympic Games. In 1904 the Olympic Games were in St. Louis and in the marathon race there were some very interesting competitors!

It was a very hot August day and more than half of the runners didn't start because it was so hot. The winner of the race was Fred Lorz. Everyone cheered when he finished and he accepted the prize. But he said later that he didn't run all the way! He ran the first nine miles but then he got tired and got into a car for the next eleven miles. Then he got out and finished the race! So, he couldn't be the winner. The person in second place was Thomas Hicks but then they discovered that he used drugs to help him continue the race when he got too tired! Another runner in the race was Felix Carvajar. His story was very strange too. While he was running he became hungry and he stopped to eat some apples from the trees in a garden. The fruit was bad and he was sick! But he had a rest and then continued the race. He came fourth.
