A lifetime in films

Elizabeth Taylor was an American film actress who appeared in more than 80 films during her long career. She was born in London in 1932, while her American parents were living and working in England. Her father was an art dealer and her mother was an actress. The family returned to the United States in 1939, just before the start of the Second World War. They moved to Los Angeles, California, where her father opened an art gallery. The visitors to the gallery included famous actors and actresses and one of them suggested to Elizabeth's mother that Elizabeth should try acting in a film. She made her first film when she was only ten years old. In 1944, she appeared in the film National Velvet. It was very successful and Elizabeth became a film star at the just 12-years-of-age. The film earned four million dollars, which was an enormous amount of money at the time. MGM studios immediately offered Elizabeth a long-term contract. During her long career, she received three Academy Awards (Oscars), including two for best actress, for her roles in Cleopatra and Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf. She was also nominated another three times for Academy Awards. Away from the world of films, Elizabeth did a lot of charity work, especially for AIDS charities, and helped to raise millions of dollars for charity. She had an interesting private life, too. She was married eight times! Her most famous husband was the British actor Richard Burton, who appeared with her in Cleopatra. Elizabeth made her last film in 2001, and died in Los Angeles in March 2011 at the age of 79
