

Professional Risk Takers

People who enjoy dangerous sports are risk takers. Extreme athletes see the world in a different way, says sports psychologist Shane Murphy. In a dangerous activity such as skydiving, most people probably do not feel in control. Extreme athletes are the opposite: They feel in control in dangerous situations. The danger can help them. For example, skier Daron Rahlves says that fear makes him try harder to succeed. Some people take risks to achieve a goal. Conservationist Michael Fay led a dangerous 2,000-mile expedition in central Africa. His goal was to help save the wildlife there. Fay's expedition helped to create 13 national parks.

Everyday Risk Takers

Most of us are not extreme athletes or explorers. However, we all like some excitement in our lives. In fact, most people are risk takers in some way. Some people take social risks, such as speaking in front of a large group of people or talking to people you don't know at a party. Some people take financial risks, such as buying a house or putting money into stocks. Other people take career risks, such as leaving their job and starting their own business. Studies show that most people take risks in some areas of life, but not in others. What kind of risk taker are you?
