It is very easy to obtain wine from grape juice. One can produce wine even at home using traditional methods. If we want to obtain alcoholic grape juice, then the only thing we need is to have some recently gathered grapes from the vineyard. The necessary reactions for the elaboration of wine will start spontaneously, if nature is given the necessary conditions. Which are those reactions? The most important reaction is alcoholic fermentation, and is nothing but the transformation of the grape sugars into alcohol. Natural yeasts are the responsible ones for this magic transformation. Nowadays it is also quite common to use a selection of commercial yeasts instead of those that are natural present in the skins of the grapes. This enables the winemaker to better “tailor” the fermentation and, consequently, the resulting wine. In the world there are wineries that resemble space laboratories. These are hi-tech wineries, where the obsession for perfect sanitary conditions is a constant feature. That is what the modern world is like and the wineries have a serious commitment with the client and the sustained quality of all their products. In Argentina there are some wineries which are more than a hundred years old and they have an enormous accumulated empirical knowledge. However, their wine used to be of bad quality. This happened in traditional wineries and in younger ones; this happened in big wineries and also in the smaller ones. This happened basically in many wineries. And if they once produced a good wine, then it was probably just by chance.
