BLOXENBURY HOUSE

Built in the late 17th century, Bloxenbury House still holds the atmosphere of days gone by. But it has also managed to change with the times and adapt through the ages.

THE GARDEN

The design of the garden is very different to when the house was first built. The garden design and layout we can see today was created in 1912 and is filled with similar flowers and trees to when the gardens were created by the owner at that time. The idea was to have a garden with a large lawn and flowers beds, and to give a feeling of open space.

THE GREAT HALL

This is the original part of the house which was started in about 1605. Here you can see the magnificent fireplace and a portrait of the first owner above it, as well as others around the room. The fire is rarely lit these days because of safety reasons. Instead there is a modern heating system to heat the Hall and house. The furniture in this room is not original but it gives an idea of how the Hall looked over 400 years ago.

THE MASTER BEDROOM

Look up when you first enter this room and you will see one of the finest ceilings from the 18th century. Back then it was painted in bright colours but today it is preserved in plain white. The furniture, including the bed, is original, as are the curtains and bedcovers, which date from the same time as the ceiling. The portraits on the walls date from the late 19th century and are of family members of that time.

THE KITCHENS

Many visitors to the house find these the most fascinating rooms as they are usually hidden from public view. But this year the kitchens are open to the public and are laid out as if the cooks are preparing a dinner in about 1920. All the equipment on display was used in that period and gives visitors a real feel for how the kitchens looked back then.
