The Beauty of the Trail

If you had five months off work, how would you most like to spend it? Relaxing on a beach? Exploring a beautiful European city? How about walking over 2,600 miles? What if you had to sleep outside or worry about wild animals? Well, that's how I spent last spring and summer when I hiked the Pacific Crest Trail from Mexico to Canada.

The Pacific Crest Trail passes through some of the highest mountains and hottest deserts in the US, but thousands of people still hike it every year. And I can see why. It's so beautiful! You can climb over 14,000 feet to the top of the highest mountain in the continental US, Mt. Whitney. It's so high, you won't see any trees up there, just lots of rocks. But you will hike through lots of forests on the rest of the trail. You'll also see over a thousand lakes. And rivers and waterfalls and…towns.

That's right, the Pacific Crest Trail doesn't just go through the wilderness. The trail may only pass directly through a few towns, but there's almost always one a few days away. And this is a good thing. After weeks of hiking and sleeping on the ground, you get really excited about stopping in town for a day or two. In a little place like Julian, California, you can do your laundry, spend a night in a hotel, and, most importantly, go to a restaurant! When I stopped there, I had two hamburgers, a can of soda, and three slices of apple pie! I have never been so full in my life! I almost couldn't walk back to the hotel.

If you're trying to avoid people, you don't have to go into town very often. But you will need to stop every once in a while to get food, or toothpaste, or even clothes and shoes! But, if you really are trying to stay away from people, maybe the Pacific Crest Trail isn't the best choice. With more and more hikers walking it every year, you will meet people. Great people. The kind of people that will keep you from getting lonely on the trail. The kind of people that will help you stay calm and happy when you're cold, and hungry and really just want to cry! In fact, the most beautiful part of the Pacific Crest Trail may not be the scenery, it may just be the people.
