

Across

4. It is based on psychoanalysis, so it still uses the 3 main parts of the mind: the id, the ego, and the superego. It's common to hear about the Object relations theory.
6. This area of psychology focuses on mental processes like memory, thinking, problem-solving, language, and decision-making.
7. It emphasizes the role of motivation in thought and behavior. Concepts such as self-actualization are essential.

Down

1. It looks at human behavior across different cultures.
2. It focuses solely on observable behaviors rather than on emphasizing internal states.
3. It suggests that mental processes exist because they serve an evolutionary purpose—meaning that they aid in human survival and reproduction.
5. It emphasizes the physical and biological bases of behavior. It also looks at how genetics influence behavior or how damage to specific areas of the brain affect personality.
