Put the sentences of the dialogue in the right order:

Store Manager: (considering) I appreciate the request, but unfortunately, we can't sell the display dress. It's pinned and styled to look its best for our customers.

Client: (a bit disappointed) Oh, I see. It's just that I really like it.

Salesperson: (approaches the store manager) Excuse me, Mr Jones. A customer wants to buy the dress from the window display. Is this all right?

Store Manager: (sympathetic) I understand, and I'm glad you like it. However, we do have the same dress in various sizes in our stock. Would you like to try it on, and we can find the perfect fit for you?

Client: (approaches the window with a beautiful dress on display) Hello, I would like to buy that dress, please.

Salesperson: (smiles) Wonderful! Let me show you to the fitting room, and we'll find the right size for you.

Client: (brightening up) That sounds great! Thank you for your help.

Salesperson: (smiling) Of course! Let me just check with my manager. Would you mind coming with me?
