Birth order

A good deal of research has been carried out by scientists on how birth order

(0) children from large families.

AFFECT

It would appear that first-born children are the most likely to imitate their parents throughout life, because they had the (17) attention of the parents until the birth of the next child. But first-borns can also be quite

DIVIDE

(18) people because they lost this complete attention when later siblings were born. (19) reason is that their mother and father were first-time parents, often nervous and (20) about what they should be doing and (21) by what might happen.

ANXIETY

OTHER

SURE

FRIGHT

Conversely, if a third child is born, the parents are much more

(22) _____ and confident in bringing up infants, so there is a

RELAX

(23) for the child to grow up being fun-loving and

TEND

(24) in group situations such as parties. Both second and third-born children are likely to have had to compete to get their parents' attention, and scientists think this makes them more independent.
