SURNAME:

A. ADVERBS & ADJECTIVES

Determine the adverbs and adjectives in the text below.

Taking a peaceful walk in nature can be healing for intense depression and anxiety, researchers claim. Since the modern world changed our brains forever, the human brain is now like a fast train moving at the speed of light. Our everyday distractions such as shiny digital screens, crowded public transport vehicles moving noisily and our colleagues or relatives talking thoughtlessly about our new decisions for the future are challenging our brain heavily to adapt to a new environment every single day it wakes up.

So, to avoid hearing and seeing all those negative ideas and facts of the modern world, researchers suggest we start leaving the city slowly and hitting the road of nature. Walking through nature reminds our brains of the inner primitive calmness and suddenly, our most important organ stops thinking continually and starts observing around like a goofy little kitten. This discharge of energy is needed for our bodies every once in a while and it is strongly advised by the researches to connect with nature regularly as the ancient residents of it.
