Later, the free man comes back to rescue the other prisoners from the cave.

After the man manages to escape, his eyes are blinded by the light, so he can't see well.

In the beginning, some prisoners are living in a cave where they can see only some shadows projected by men that they don't know.

Because they have always lived in it, the cave is the only world they know. However, one prisoner manages to escape.

Eventually, the free man adjusts to the light and realizes that the cave's shadows were only a representation of reality.

In the end, the prisoners don't take the man seriously because anything out of the darkness is fiction for them, so they refuse to escape.

These prisoners have lived in the cave since childhood and can't escape from it.
