Essaouira is a wonderful place to visit. You [redacted] enjoy walking through the streets, shopping at the market or tasting local food. It's often windy in Essaouira, so you [redacted] bring warm clothes. The wind means that the beach isn't good for sunbathing but you [redacted] go kite-surfing – it's really exciting!

If you like history, you [redacted] explore the old part of town. There are lots of market stalls here. If you want to buy something, discuss the price with the stallholder. You certainly [redacted] pay the first price you hear!

Many people here speak English, Spanish or French, so you [redacted] learn Arabic, although you [redacted] probably learn a few useful phrases. You [redacted] stay in expensive hotels; there are other options, including riads, which are hotels that feel like family homes.
