To the Rescue!

Peter Wallerstein spends nearly every day on the beaches of California, but he's not a surfer or a lifeguard. In fact, he rarely goes into the ocean. Peter rescues marine animals like dolphins and sea lions. He works for Marine Animal Rescue (MAR). MAR rescues animals from beaches. The animals sometimes can't find food and are weak or sick. Most often, though, the animals are trapped in a net or a fishing line. During a rescue, Peter gently moves the animal into a cage. He takes the animal to a marine life care center for treatment and when it is well the center releases the animal back into the ocean.

MAR's office is a small trailer on a beach and Peter is the only employee. At night, Peter sleeps with his cell phone on to take calls from the coastguard and concerned people about sea animals that need help. When he wakes up in the morning, he immediately makes a phone call to the care center to check on the latest rescued animals. Sometimes, he doesn't even have time for breakfast before the first call of the day comes in. When it does, Peter along with Pumpkin, his dog, quickly jump into the rescue truck and are on their way.

Every year, Peter rescues hundreds of animals. He works together with the police, and the coastguard. He also teaches lifeguards and volunteers about marine rescues. Saving sea animals is all Peter thinks about. For him, each rescue makes a difference!
