THE FLOCK OF COTTON

One teenage girl was repairing chapan for her father. Her mother sat beside her and began teaching her, "Dear child, among all the thing existing in the world there is nothing that can not be used for something good, so there is no need to leave them anywhere on the ground."

While mother was saying so, the girl finished with chapan, picked up little flocks of cotton from the floor and throw them on the yard. Doing so she said, "Mother, this little flocks of cotton are unlikely to be used for something else".

"My child, those flocks will find their place as well", the mother said.

Then the girl looked into the window. She saw wind throwing the flocks of cotton and little sparrow chasing on of the flocks. When it caught the flock, it flew away.

"Mother, the sparrow took one flock away. What shall it do with it?"

"You see, child, here is what I meant. The sparrow will pave itself a nest with that cotton, and now its kids will be warm and will have a soft bed.
