Questions 149-150 refer to the following e-mail.

E-Mail message
From:	Eiji Furuta
To:	Jill Bennett
Subject:	Delivery packaging
Date:	April 3

Hi Jill,

Customer Service has let me know that several of our grocery delivery customers have contacted us about our meat packaging. Apparently, they are concerned that the meat is only packed in our normal packaging (a foam tray covered with stretchable film). They would like another layer to be added to protect the other products from bacteria in case this packaging fails and the meat's juices leak.

Now, we haven't received any reports of the normal packaging actually failing, so I'm not convinced that it has to be upgraded. However, I think we should at least look into ways to accommodate these customers' wishes. Could you research additional packaging options and the cost and environmental impact involved in using them? I'd like a short report on your findings by the end of the month.

Thanks,

Eiji

149. What are customers concerned about?
- (A) The use of non-recyclable packaging materials
 - (B) The temperature of meat rising to an unsafe level
 - (C) Staff not handling delivery containers gently

- (A) It may not be necessary.

 - (C) It requires Ms. Bennett's approval.
 - (D) It will be unpopular with employees.

Questions 158-161 refer to the following article.

Local Business

(September 13)—With the opening of a Cainlen Superstore just two weeks away, the Bakert Merchants Association (BMA) has begun an initiative that encourages consumers to support local businesses. At least thirty stores have hung “Buy from Bakert” signs in their front windows.

Like other Cainlen locations across the nation, the new Bakert store stretches over 180,000 square feet of land and will sell groceries, clothing, and electronics and boast a garden supply center and a photo developing lab. The massiveness of its floor plan meant that its construction was subject to public review regarding potential harm to plants and wildlife near its site on Todd Road.

At that time, the BMA almost succeeded in blocking the development by pressing the city council to consider its effects in another area—that of local commerce. The BMA argued that Cainlen would put smaller retailers out of business and thus weaken the community in the long term.

However, the council was more persuaded by Cainlen representatives’ claims that the store would ultimately benefit Bakert by creating new jobs for its citizens and allowing them to enjoy the chain’s famously low prices.

BMA president and Bakert Sporting Goods owner Laura Comstock says the Buy from Bakert campaign “just asks people to think before they shop” and adds that it will continue “for as long as it feels necessary”.

158. Why was the article written?

- (B) To explain the history of a nationwide company

Questions 165-167 refer to the following summary of a report.

Padgino Employee Satisfaction Survey Report

Executive Summary

Tayona Consulting Services conducted a survey to measure the job satisfaction of employees of Padgino. Data was primarily collected with the use of the survey platform ZestSurvey. Employees were asked to numerically rate their satisfaction with factors such as company management, job duties, and employee benefits. The list of questions and a detailed analysis of the collected data are included in this report's appendices. Four supplementary interviews were conducted with employees who indicated willingness to further discuss their answers. To protect these employees' privacy, these interviews are not described in detail in this report.

The findings indicate that employees are satisfied with most aspects of their jobs and particularly their pay. The only part of the survey with a significant number of negative ratings is that of employee support. It appears that when employees encounter a problem during a call, they are often directed to connect the customer to a manager. In such cases, the employee does not learn how the problem can be resolved in the future. Employees expressed frustration with this situation. Therefore, this report proposes that regular training sessions be held to teach employees how to successfully deal with recurring problems.

165. Who most likely were the survey participants?

- (A) Retail store clerks
- (B) Bank tellers
- (C) Flight attendants
- (D) Call center representatives

166. How was the survey data mainly obtained?

- (B) Through individual interviews

- (D) Through focus group discussions

 - customers
- (B) Increasing employee compensation

- (D) Directing supervisors to manage less strictly
