Part 3: Reading comprehension

Passage 1: Read the following passage and fill in each blank with NO MORE THAN TWO WORDS AND A NUMBER from the passage

My American Airlines Lost Luggage Story

I recently flew on American Airlines from Philadelphia to Zurich. American is part of the Oneworld Airline Alliance, which sadly has poor coverage in Europe. I was ultimately flying onward to Albania, where I was going to meet up with Laura, but needed to fly on a different airline.

On arriving in Zurich, my bag never made it. Several other passengers also didn't receive their bags. This was a non-stop flight and there were no tight connections (or any connections at all). I had checked in to the flight early, so it wasn't a rush. There's no excuse for my bag not to have made the flight.

According to American Airlines, my bag sat in Philadelphia for five days before being sent onward to Athens...not Zurich. Had American Airline put the bag on the next flight the next day, it would have caught up to me, but that didn't happen.

Throughout the entire process, American Airlines customer service staff were extremely apologetic and polite, but I got the feeling they really weren't doing a whole lot or trying to help. The compassion settled tensions, but did little to resolve the fundamental problem. Things improved slightly once I was put in touch with the American Airlines Baggage Call Center. I got my bag back. It took 39 days. Yes, I eventually got paid for the items that I bought while my bag was missing. But I wasted an immense amount of time. I spent over 3 hours on hold from Europe with American Airline baggage racking up some pretty serious phone charges.

I spent hours following up again and again with American Airlines. That's time I don't get back in my life and there's no compensation for wasted time. We only recently learned the pro trick of using a concierge service to save time.

To be honest, I probably fared better than most. I'm an American Airlines Platinum elite flyer. However, I'm not feeling the love from AA these days. I don't really feel like my loyalty has been reciprocated. So yes, I probably fared much better than some victims of airline lost luggage. Unfortunately, there's still very little recourse for passengers. And while the airlines claim they are improving, it doesn't look like it to most frequent fliers.

31. The writer took a flight to Zurich to see _____, who was in Albania.
32. The American Airline staff who were responsible for _____ were not only apologetic but also polite when dealing with her missing luggage problem.
33. She got her bag back after _____. Despite getting paid for what she bought while her bag was missing, she had to waste much time.

34. She advised people to use a/an _____ in order to save their time when tracking for missing luggage.
35. The writer gets the feeling that American Airline hasn't reciprocated her _____.

Passage 2: Read the following passage and answer each question with NO MORE THAN TWO WORDS from the passage

Basic and additional hotel services

Basic services of hotel business

Two basic services provided by a hotel are room and board. Thus, room (or the official term hotel accommodation) is the main service of the enterprise that belong to hotel business. Checking-in and checking-out are held round-the-clock. Besides providing an accommodation for temporary staying, related services such as changing bedclothes, giving towels and hygiene items, the opportunity to use appliances and TV set, cleaning and sanitation are available. All these services are included into the cost of a hotel room in accordance with contractual obligations.

Meals are provided by dining facilities, restaurant, cafes, bars that work in a hotel or in collaboration with it. Foods can be also delivered to a hotel room.

Additional services provided by a hotel

To attract more clients to a hotel additional paid or unpaid services are often available. They could be different entertainments, personal services, services for families, business or VIP clients that are often provided in the form of packages. Attractive additional services provided by a hotel are able to fill the season of low demand, to increase profit and improve image.

Of course, the services provided by a hotel complex will differ greatly from the services of a mini-hotel. It is obvious that large- and medium-sized hotels have greater possibilities and budget. They are able to supply the clients with impressive and voluminous services, without losing their profitability. Small hotels cannot provide their clients with comprehensive and rapid basic and additional services. However, any hotel has to have their target audience, learn their needs and demands, strive to meet them. The list and the quality of additional services have to conform to the requirements of the category that a hotel has been assigned to – in other words, the number of stars it has.

36. What does the term of “room service” officially describe?
37. What does a hotel collaborate with an outside restaurant to offer its clients?
38. In which form does a hotel provide its additional services?
39. How are the services that a large-sized hotel provides?
40. Whose needs and demands does any hotel have to study?
