The way we communicate

Over thirty-three percent of the world's population is on the internet and this means the way we communicate is very different now than in the past.

(1) These sites are all about sharing with other people. They can tell us news about our friends and others. (2) Maybe some people share too much, and it's better to keep some things to ourselves. But sharing is just one part of communication is different because of the internet.

The internet is also very international. We can share our lives with people all around the world. But what does this mean for communication? Well, we can find out about places we want to visit and what other cultures are like. This can make us think about different ways of living. It also makes the world feel smaller.

We also now spend more time texting, and instant messaging. In this way, we have more time to think about replies, compared to in spoken conversations. But will this change in the future?

(3) This means that we need to reply quicker. These apps will probably be more popular in the future, and they create a more life-like way to communicate.

The internet also makes us do certain things more quickly. (4) Back then, people bought newspapers and read articles with thousands of words. Now, online news stories are shorter and many readers get bored if articles have too many words.

(5) People will their screens to search and look at information on the internet now, but in just a few years' time, screens will probably be different. Like in the film Iron Man 2, we might just our head and arms to find things on a screen in the air!
