Why I will never buy anything on the Internet again

Ask most people how shopping will be in the future and inevitably they will mention the Internet. Well, the other day I had a bad enough experience shopping (a) _____ to put me off for life. I heard about a book you could download from a (b) _____ before it was published and sold in bookshops. As it was by an author I adore, I decided to investigate.

I found the page and read the information. They charged 30 euros for the (c) _____. Not a massive amount but you had to use a credit card. I completed the form with the endless details requested, including my (d) _____ address.

Finally I entered my credit card number, because they solemnly promised that there was no (e) _____ risk. When the payment was authorized – it took about a minute – a new screen appeared with a (f) _____ which said 'Download now'.

I (g) _____ on the button but nothing happened so I clicked again. Then a (h) _____ came up saying 'Download suspended due to network overload. Please try again later.'

Finally the system (i) _____ and I had to turn off the computer. When I reconnected, the same forms as before (j) _____ up but I didn't want to risk paying again, so I wrote an email to the company explaining the problem. I never got a (k) _____.

I assumed that as I never got the book I wouldn't have to (l) _____, but when I got my credit card statement at the end of the month I saw the (m) _____ for 30 euros was there. It was too late to do anything and there was no one to (n) _____ to. Okay, so it was only 30 euros – no big deal – but the question I ask myself is this: why risk buying online when it amounts to what is basically an act of faith? In any case, it will be a long time before I try buying something over the Internet again.
