March 12

Dear Ms. Paxton,

I spoke to your assistant on the telephone last Thursday, and she suggested that I write directly to you to express my interest in an internship at your company.

I will graduate soon and I am seeking hands-on experience in market research. Specifically, I am interested in an internship that will offer training as a focus group discussion moderator. I believe that my business degree and my interpersonal skills qualify me for an internship in this area.

As my enclosed résumé indicates, I served as a part-time assistant to the moderator of focus groups at Mauer Advertising for one academic year. My other related experience includes conducting opinion polls for my university newspaper and observing focus groups for an advertising class at the university. I am extremely interested in working at Advertising Research Group and would welcome an opportunity to speak with you further about the internships you have available.

Sincerely yours,

Rita Warren

Dear Ms. Warren,

Thank you for your letter and your résumé. We are always interested in providing opportunities to recent graduates with your experience and qualifications.

Unfortunately, at the present time we have no open internships that match your specific interest. On a more positive note, however, we are looking for a trainee to help conduct market research opinion polls. It is a one-year internship that could lead to the offer of permanent employment. If this type of work interests you, I suggest you contact Juan Santos, the head of our human resources department, to discuss the responsibilities of the internship.

Yours truly,

Karen Paxton
