

Tim: I've just read this article. I wrote the headline for you and we found a good photo. But you've written about football. That's not what our readers want. They want to know the interesting things about Joe Chapman. _____? Did you ask him about his new girlfriend?

Interviewer: No, but I asked him _____. He usually scores at least one.

Tim: Yes, I asked him _____. He said it was getting better. I'm delighted. I told him to be careful the next time.

Interviewer: Great. But did you ask him who he was with at that nightclub last week?

Tim: No, but I asked him _____.

Interviewer: Very interesting, I'm sure. And does she?

Tim: Yes, every single one. Did you ask him about the argument with the new manager?

Interviewer: No, but I asked him _____. I asked him _____. He said that he had no plans to move to another club. I'm very pleased for him. But surely you asked him about his free time. We want to know where he goes, what he does.

Tim: No, but I invited him to have lunch with me after the interview, and he agreed.

Interviewer: Yes, so then you asked him _____?

Tim: No, but he reminded me to watch the match next Saturday, as it's a really important one. But not very interesting information for our readers. I asked him _____, which position. He said that he'd play his normal position, center forward.

Interviewer: What about those fashion adverts he's in for men's clothes? Did you ask him how much he earns from those?

Tim: No, but I asked him _____. He said he expected them to win for the third time. Oh, and we didn't get a photograph of him because he asked us not to take any.

Interviewer: Oh, next time I'll do it myself. And I advise _____ with Joe Chapman.
