Miguel, an exchange student in London, decided to explore the city on his own. As he walked through the streets, he became fascinated with the architecture and vibrant markets. However, when trying to return to his residence, he realized he was lost. He didn't remember the way back and his phone had run out of battery.

Feeling a bit panicked, Miguel approached a local and asked in his best English, "Excuse me, could you help me? I'm trying to find my way back to Trafalgar square." The kind resident, seeing his distress, gave him detailed directions and assured him he was just a few streets away.

Grateful for the help, Miguel followed the directions and slowly recognized the way back. Reaching Trafalgar square, he felt a surge of relief. This experience taught him the importance of paying attention to his surroundings and the kindness of London's people. From that day on, Miguel made sure to always carry a portable charger and a map of the city on his adventures.

According to the story answer these questions:

1 What's Miguel's profession?

4 What word could replace "distress"?

2 What kind of word is "however"?

5 What did Miguel learn about this experience ?

3 Was Miguel's phone battery working when he got lost?

6 What does Miguel carry from now on?