

76 it as a subject/object

It snowed all night and it took a long time to clear the roads in the morning.

1 it as a subject

We can use it as a subject pronoun, to talk about a noun we have already mentioned:

There was an awful storm last night. It damaged the roof.

But often it has no real meaning, e.g. It's raining. We use it + be

- with an adjective, to describe a general situation: I love living in Cambridge. It's nice here.
- to talk about time: What time is it? It's ten o'clock. What time will it be when we arrive?
- to talk about days and dates: What day is it? It's Monday. It was my birthday yesterday.
- to describe distances: It's five kilometres from home to the station. It's 200 kilometres away.
- to talk about the weather: It's raining. It isn't cold.

We say it takes five minutes, two hours, etc. when we talk about how long we need to do something:

'How long does it take to get to the airport?' 'It takes about an hour.'

It took a long time to clear the roads in the morning.

2 it as an object

We also use it as an object pronoun to talk about a noun we have already mentioned:

There was a lot of snow yesterday. The children enjoyed playing in it.

3 it's + adjective/noun + to

We often use an adjective or noun after be + infinitive with to:

It + be	ADJECTIVE	INFINITIVE	It + be	NOUN	INFINITIVE
It's	nice	to see you.	It was	a mistake	to accept this job.
It isn't	easy	to find our house.	It will be	a shame	to miss your wedding.

4 there and it

We use there + be to give new information. We use it to say more about that information.

There's somebody at the door. It's the postman.

There's some soup on the cooker. It's tomato soup.

We don't use it to say where something is or when something happened. We use there:

~~It's a swimming pool at the leisure centre.~~ ✓ There's a swimming pool at the leisure centre.

~~It was a lot of snow last night.~~ ✓ There was a lot of snow last night.

MY WORST JOURNEY EVER

A few years ago, I had to go to Stuttgart Airport to meet some friends.
 (0) It usually only takes about half an hour as (1) 's only about 25 kilometres from my house to the airport, but this day was totally different. (2) was some heavy snow in the night, but that isn't usually a problem in Germany – (3) 's usually easy to drive in snow because they clear the roads very quickly. Anyway, I left home a bit early because of the snow, as (4) was quite deep. Soon after I left, (5) suddenly started snowing again and the car in front of me stopped. Luckily, I didn't hit (6) but I saw that (7) was a really long queue of cars ahead. I sat in that queue for about two hours – (8) was really boring, but I finally found out what the problem was – (9) was an accident at the front of the queue. (10) was really late when I finally got to the airport, and then I found out that my friends' plane had gone to Frankfurt because of the snow!
