V. Read the passage and choose the correct answer A, B, C, or D to each question.

One of the most important learning skills you can help your child to develop is to become an independent learner. Children who are more independent learners tend to have more self-confidence and have a greater sense that they are in control of their learning. Encouraging independent learning can happen from a young age, but it can be hard for parents who are not trained teachers to know when they are giving too much help and when they are not giving enough. If you regularly help your child with their homework, there are a few simple steps you can take to help your child become more independent learners.

- Help your child to answer the first question or two in an activity then allow them to do the next ones by themselves. Encourage them to get the answer themselves, but if they are struggling it may help them to point out how you would find the answer.
- Negotiate a time limit on how long they think it will take them to finish the rest of the activity to help them stay focused on their work. Perhaps even set a timer on your phone and encourage them to 'race' the clock. The time limit should be reasonable so that children can complete the activity with neat writing.
- If your child is used to your presence when they complete their homework, gradually move away from them over a period of time. Helping them to start their homework and then moving to sit nearby but not with them while they finished can give them the comfort of you being there but encourage them to complete the work by themselves. Over time you can put more distance between you until they are able to work alone while you are able to get on with other things you might need to do.
- Set aside time with your child after they has finished their homework. You could play a game together or read a story. It's a good reward for having finished their work by themselves.

1. According to the writer's view, becoming an independent learner is _____.
A. an important learning skill for a child B. a great sense in control of learning
C. a self-confidence in life D. not necessary
2. Why it is hard for parents to know when they are giving too much help and when they are not giving enough?
A. Because they are not trained teachers.
B. Because they regularly help their children with their homework

- C. Because they don't encourage their children to learn independently
D. Because they always encourage their children to learn independently.
3. The word "you" in the second paragraph refers to _____.
A. questions B. answers C. parents D. children
4. What is the aim of limiting time?
A. To help children finish the rest of the activity.
B. To help children stay focused on their work.
C. To set a timer on children's phone.
D. To encourage children to "race" the clock.
5. Which of the following statement is NOT true about paragraph 4?
A. Encourage children to complete the homework by themselves.
B. Sit nearby but not with children while they are doing homework.
C. Put more distance between parents and children until children are able to work alone.
D. Gradually approach children and help them with their homework.
6. What is the passage mainly about?
A. Reward your child for having completed homework on their own.
B. Take time to play with your child.
C. Help your parents to become independent workers.
