Every day before dawn, I woke up to have Suhoor (pre-dawn meal) with my family. We ate nutritious foods to keep us energized throughout the day. Then, we prayed Fajr (morning) prayer together.

During the day, I focused on my studies or work, trying to maintain productivity despite fasting. I also spent time reading the Quran and reflecting on its teachings.

As the sun began to set, I eagerly awaited the call to Maghrib (sunset) prayer. This signaled the time to break our fast, called Iftar. Iftar was a joyous occasion shared with family and friends, where we enjoyed delicious meals and refreshing drinks.

After Iftar, I went to the mosque for Taraweeh prayers. These prayers were a spiritual highlight of my day, as I felt a deep connection with Allah and the community.

Before bedtime, I performed the Witr prayer and supplicated for forgiveness and blessings. Then, I rested, preparing for another day of fasting and spiritual growth.

Ramadan was a time of self-reflection, prayer, and community for me. It strengthened my faith and taught me valuable lessons about patience, gratitude, and empathy.
