Mummies

A mummy is the dead body of a person or an animal that is preserved either naturally or by chemicals. Ancient Egyptians used to make mummies out of dead people because they believed that after passing away, the dead person would make a way to another world where they would lead a new life.

Mummies were buried with their valuables, general belongings and even food. Artists were specially called to paint the tomb walls with the major scenes from the dead person's life. Many mummies were buried with carved wooden figures of slaves. It was believed that the carved figures would magically come to life in the land of the dead.

Today, most of the mummies are open for public display in museums all around the world.
