Fractured Story: Little Red Riding Hood

Once upon a time, in a land not so far away, there lived a little girl named Little Red Riding Hood. Contrary to the classic tale, Little Red Riding Hood was not just a mere girl; she was a skilled archer known throughout the kingdom for her bravery and wit. One sunny afternoon, Little Red Riding Hood set out on a journey to visit her grandmother who lived on the outskirts of the enchanted forest.

As she ventured deeper into the woods, Little Red Riding Hood encountered various creatures, including talking rabbits and dancing fairies. They warned her about a notorious band of wolves led by the cunning Wolf King, who roamed the forest in search of their next meal. But Little Red Riding Hood remained undeterred, determined to reach her grandmother's cottage before nightfall.

Upon arriving at Grandma's cottage, Little Red Riding Hood was shocked to find the door ajar and the interior in disarray. Suspicious, she cautiously entered the cottage, bow and arrow at the ready. To her horror, she discovered the Wolf King disguised as her grandmother, lying in wait.

"Ah, Little Red Riding Hood, you've fallen into my trap," growled the Wolf King.

But Little Red Riding Hood was not one to be intimidated. With lightning speed, she notched an arrow and aimed it at the Wolf King's heart.

"Not so fast, you fiend!" she declared.

With a swift motion, Little Red Riding Hood released the arrow, striking the Wolf King right between the eyes. With a howl of pain, the Wolf King fled into the forest, never to trouble Little Red Riding Hood or her grandmother again.
