

Put the text extracts in order. Write A–H in the gaps.

A

Faro, (2008) The Community Within: How host countries fail migrants

- migrants facing major problems when moving to another country
- research shows that migrants will work harder for less pay.

Results in more success for companies they work for.

- 22 percent of migrants return home within 3 years.
- increase in vandalism and physical violence on and from the immigrant communities
- lack of government programme mean language problems and failure to culturally integrate.

B

Griffiths, (2005) Sons and Daughters of Migrants: The future of all of us

- second generation immigrants train parents in new culture and close the culture gap
- government attempting to support immigrants' children through education
- multicultural society evolving in Britain giving a good example to other countries who will face such issues in the future over 25,000 immigrant children born every year in England alone.

1

2

3

4

5

6

7

8

A Faro studies the problems that migrants have when they first come to the host country, whereas Griffiths examines those of second generation migrants.

B They have also been very successful in strengthening the British economy. It seems unlikely the country would have developed its economy so fast without this sudden influx of workers.

C Griffiths touches on the growth of the second generation of communities in the UK and argues that it is growing fast, leading to a much more multicultural society in the UK.

D According to Faro, there are major problems for migrants when they first arrive in the community. The failure of the government to provide cultural integration and language programmes results in migrants identifying even more with their home country.

E She also disputes Faro's argument that the government is not doing enough for the communities by focusing on the efforts to improve education in the communities.

F Faro also observes that migrant workers are much more motivated to work than a citizen of the home country.

G Faro (2008) and Griffiths (2005) approach the issue of the migrant communities from two different directions. Both of them have very different ideas about the migrant communities.

H Griffiths notes the cultural crisis in the community but his argument differs from Faro. In Griffiths' view, children of the second generation can do a lot to close the gaps between the two communities.

Choose the correct word from the drop-down menu.

1. The government had to re-think the new law that doubled the cost parking fines; it _____ proved to be controversial with many people threatening to refuse to pay.
2. Discrimination laws in the workforce encourage employees and employers to behave in a politically _____ manner and show respect to all groups of people.
3. For students who study at a university outside their home town, they have the opportunity to experience a _____ autonomy than those who continue to live at home.
4. Over the years, the emphasis of language teaching has _____ from a teacher-led to a student-centred approach.
5. In order to ensure the reliability of the test results as much as possible, the environment in which the scientific experiment was set up needed to be _____ controlled.
6. It can be difficult to get compensation from airline companies for delayed flights due to _____ circumstances, such as extremely bad weather.
7. As the head of state, the Queen can _____ authority in a number of ways. In theory, she can choose the prime minister when there is no clear majority in general elections, but in practice, this is highly unlikely to happen.
8. The new rehabilitation centre _____ emphasis on offenders understanding the reasons behind any crimes committed and getting them back into the community.
9. Severe _____ are imposed by some immigration offices in terms of the types of food you are allowed to bring into the country.
10. She was seriously ill so missed the essay deadline. Due to her _____ circumstances, she was allowed to submit her essay at a later date.

Match the collocations with their definitions.

exercise authority

greater autonomy

personal circumstances

exceptional circumstances tightly controlled politically correct

highly controversial impose limitations (on) shift emphasis place emphasis

special situations

more independence

strictly managed or regulated put focus on behaviour that does not offend or insult anyone causing a great deal of discussion and disagreement

apply power or influence enforce restrictions

private or individual situations change focus