The Origins of a Modern Day Festival

Once upon a time, the people of China had lived in peace and harmony for many years – until one New Year's Eve, a monster named Nian (which in modern Chinese means "year") came from the ocean. It looked like a bull with the head of a lion and had a huge mouth that swallowed several people in one bite. People screamed in terror and tried to run away.

An old man, who was actually an immortal god in disguise, came to the rescue of the frightened people. He had seen their great fear and had taken pity on them. "Nian is afraid of the color red," he told them, "so put red paper decorations on your windows and doors." He also revealed that the monster was afraid of noise, and so they should make as much noise as possible. And finally, he instructed them to light fires, because the creature was terrified of fire. If they did this, they would scare Nian away. "Do this every New Year, in case Nian returns," he declared. After he had given them his words of advice, he ran after the beast, jumped on its back, and rode away.

To this day, the people of China put up red paper, light fireworks, and hang lanterns on New Year's Eve. There is usually a parade with a large crowd of people making lots of noise and enjoying the festival atmosphere. The Chinese New Year does not always fall on the same date each year, although it is always in January or February. It's an important celebration all over the world, and there are similar celebrations in Japan, Korea, and Vietnam.
