When it comes to [c   ] a memorable moment, we often end up taking [s   ] that don't do the occasion justice. Read on for some tips on improving the quality of your photos.

• Before you take a picture, make sure the subject is in [f   ] – you want clear, [s   ] images, not [b   ] ones where you can't see the details clearly.

• Make sure you choose the correct [l   ] – if you want to take close-ups then you need one that will allow you to [z   ] in and take a good picture.

• When taking photos of people, decide if you want them to [p   ] for the shot or if you are going to try and take the picture without them noticing so they look natural.

• Once you have your photos, remember you can [c   ] them, so for example you can just have a shot of someone's face instead of their whole body. You can also [r   ] them to make the colours stronger or get rid of things you don't want.

• You can also [a   ] photos to remove elements you don't like, or change the colours in the picture.

Happy photographing!

Some people are camera ...s................, they feel nervous posing for photos, so that they rarely have .... taken. Otherwise, there are s...................., who usually smiles or make .... faces in front of the lens. They have strong .... that each photo helps them .... popularity. They have a .... of taking selfie every minute or in every place they are. It's like they make a .... of their personality or just a way to .... sadness or loneliness off . On the other hand, Using ....apps to make photo better .... people to change their appearance or even lose personality. Unfortunately, sharing selfie has become .... and lots of psychologists raise .... of its pros and cons.