Read the fable and answer the questions:

The Crow and the Pitcher

The crow had been flying all day, and he was very thirsty. He saw a pitcher that was half full of water and hurried toward it for a drink. The pitcher was too tall for the crow's short beak to reach the water inside. The crow tried tilting the pitcher, but it was too heavy to move. He then noticed pebbles scattered on the ground. He picked up the pebbles and, one at a time, began dropping them into the pitcher. Slowly, the water began to rise. It took a long time and many pebbles, but soon the water reached the top. The crow then drank all he wanted.

Moral: Doing things little by little is just as good as doing things all at once.

How do you think the crow feels after she finally drinks from the pitcher?

a. proud

b. surprised

c. thirsty

d. pretty
