

At the doctor

Mia feels sick lately. She has a bad headache and her throat hurts. She also has a pain in her wrist. It's swollen and painful to touch. Mia doesn't have much of an appetite and feels full-up after just a little food.

Mia decides to go to the doctor. The doctor asks her questions. "Do you have a fever?" "No," says Mia. "Do you sneeze a lot?" "No," she says again. "Do you ever feel black and pass out?" The doctor asks with concern. "No," Mia replies.

The doctor examines Mia's wrist. "It looks like a bruise," he says. "It might be a little sprained. I'll give you some medicine to help with the pain." He also gives Mia some advice. "Take it easy for a few days and loosen the bandage on your wrist a bit at night."

Mia feels relieved. She thanks the doctor and goes home to rest.
