

Shopping in a rush

Mia rushes into the market, her shopping list clutched in her hand. She forgot almost everything! "Excuse me!" she calls out impatiently to a clerk stocking shelves. "Where can I find bread?" The clerk smiles kindly. "Go down aisle three, right next to the fresh produce. But be careful, some of the bread might be a little stale."

Mia sighs. She hates buying stale bread, but she doesn't have time to argue. She hurries down the aisle, grabs a loaf that feels soft, and adds it to her basket. Next, she needs toothpaste and shampoo. These should be easy, right?

Wrong. The toiletries section is a mess! Everything is out of place, and Mia can't find anything on her list. Frustration bubbles up, but then she remembers her grandma's advice: "Take a deep breath and start again." Mia takes a moment to calm down, then asks a nearby customer for help.

The customer points her in the right direction, and Mia finally finds what she needs. As she approaches the checkout, a sense of relief washes over her. Maybe shopping at the market wasn't so enjoyable today, but at least she got all her groceries and toiletries!
