The person that I want to mention is Sarah, who is from Japan and is very fluent in Vietnamese. Although we have never met each other in person, I was fortunate enough to have an opportunity to collaborate with her and her company during a marketing partnership project that we worked on together.

Our collaboration lasted for several months in an attempt to promote tourism between Japan and Vietnam. Through numerous online chat sessions, I figured out that Sarah is outstanding in being a talkative person. Her ability to express herself clearly and engage with people is truly exceptional. Perhaps of this talkative nature, she has become a master in devising genius initiatives that helped strengthen the bond and efficiency of her subordinates despite being separated by the computer screen.

With her excellent Vietnamese skills and creativity, she's become a key player in welcome tourists to our beautiful country. Sarah's talent for talking isn't just about words; it's about making people feel connected and excited about experiencing Vietnam. Whether it's explaining the rich cultural heritage, suggesting the best local eateries, or sharing stories about the breathtaking landscapes, Sarah turns each conversation into a chance to showcase the wonders of our country.

It's inspiring to see how her unique qualities are making a positive impact, and it would be awesome for me to have a direct conversation with her in the future.
