Why is Eva having a picnic?

Subject: My picnic!

Hi Pedro,

Can you come to my 1 birthday picnic? It's this Saturday afternoon by the lake. You can get there by bus or bike.

We'll have lots of 2 _____ food like rainbow fruit bowls, salads and of course a big birthday cake! You should bring some food too, but don't bring too many cookies or sweets. Let's be 3 _____ !

Bring your guitar and play us a song! And bring your swimsuit and an umbrella. It could be 4 _____ or rainy!

We'll have blankets to sit on, kites to fly if it's 5 _____ , footballs to kick and 6 _____ games to play. But don't forget to help me clean up at the end.

We should leave the lake as tidy as we find it.

See you there!

Eva

Holly's adventure in Malaysia

Last year Holly went to Malaysia to visit her friend Nur. 'You will have a great time,' said her mum. 'But you might feel some culture shock!'

'What's that?' said Holly.

'Well, our culture is the way we live – our food, our hobbies, our everyday life,' said her mum. 'But when you go somewhere very different, everything seems strange. So you can feel a bit worried or surprised.' So Holly read a lot about Malaysia and it helped.

For example, she knew that she could shake hands to say hello but she used two hands, not just one. Nur's mother and father were very pleased. 'You've learned about Malaysian culture!' they said. 'That's great!'

The first morning Nur gave her rice in banana leaves for breakfast. 'Rice!' said Holly. 'I read that you sometimes have rice for breakfast here. And now I'm trying it!' She was happy.

In the street Holly wasn't surprised when she couldn't read everything because the signs were in different languages. And her favourite part of the holiday was watching a special Malaysian dance and trying on a Malaysian dress.

When Holly got home her mother asked, 'Was Malaysia very different?' 'Yes,' said Holly. 'I loved Malaysia and I loved the culture shock. It wasn't too bad because I read about it before I went. I learned a lot about a different country. And I feel more confident now. I've learned I can do new things on my own!'

- 1 Where did Holly go?
- 2 Did she enjoy the holiday?
- 3 Did Holly think culture shock was a good thing?
