Visitors to "Remembering Viet Nam" will have the opportunity to see a fascinating and varied selection of records from the National Archives and its Presidential libraries. The records on display help fill the gaps in our collective memory about what happened and why. They make people understand more about the series of choices, strategies, and personalities as a result of the involvement of the US in Southeast Asia.

There are historic items including posters, artwork, telegrams, radio intercepts, photographs, artefacts, official documents, and letters. They span 1918 - 1975 and are considered critical to understanding the conflict and its origins.

Of special interest are the audio recordings, some of which have only recently been declassified. The exhibition includes several listening stations, including an "Oval Office Listening Area," where visitors can pick up one of three phones to hear conversations held by Presidents Kennedy, Johnson, and Nixon.

The exhibition also is an opportunity to hear stories from a variety of perspectives. Everyday people whose lives were forever impacted by the conflict – some voluntarily, some involuntarily – share their experiences.

At a kiosk, visitors will be able to submit their own thoughts about what happened and how it affected them. Selections of these contributions will be displayed in the exhibition for visitors to read.

X. Read the passage and choose the correct answer A, B, C, or D.

The Industrial Revolution was a period of major mechanisation and innovation that began in Great Britain during the mid-18th century and early 19th century and later spread throughout much of the world. The first Industrial Revolution began in Great Britain in the 1700s and 1800s, dominated by the exploitation of coal and iron, and was a time of significant innovations. It led to many other inventions including the assembly line, telegraph, steam engine, sewing machine, and internal combustion engine, and left a profound impact on how people lived and the way businesses operated.

The Industrial Revolution created an increase in employment opportunities. With the advent of factories during the 18th century, people began working for companies located in urban areas for the first time. Although the wages were still low, and conditions were harsh, people could earn better than farming. As more populations migrated to urban areas to search for jobs, there were also significant improvements in city planning. Education was improved, resulting in groundbreaking inventions such as the sewing machine, X-ray, lightbulb, calculator. These inventions are in fact still significant today.

The Industrial Revolution also changed the way people worked and lived. It enabled higher productivity in factories and made life more comfortable at home.
