Would you bring your parents to work?

How would you feel about bringing your mom or dad to work with you? Would you be worried about the things that they might say to your boss? Or nervous that they might start showing embarrassing photos of you as a child to the co-worker who sits next to you? Well, get ready for Bring Your Parents to Work Day, an event that is already becoming popular in some U.S. companies and that could be coming your way soon!

The company where it all started, LinkedIn, realized that there are a lot of parents who don't understand what their children's jobs involve. There is already a national Take Your Child to Work Day for workers who want to take their sons and daughters to their places of work, and more than 37 million Americans take part every year. So why not do the same thing for parents? LinkedIn's argument is that employees who feel supported by their family are happier and more productive. Now, there are more than 80 companies in 18 countries that organize an annual event for parents to get to know how their kids spend their time at work. So what do the parents think of it? Martin Richards has just spent a day at the office where his daughter and son-in-law work. "For me, it was a great opportunity to see how digital marketing works, to meet some of Imogen's co-workers, and, best of all, to spend a day with my eldest daughter!"

3 Read the text and answer the questions.

- 1 Which company introduced the idea of a Bring Your Parents to Work Day?
- 2 How many people in the U.S. take part in the Take Your Child to Work Day?

The ultimate long-distance relationship

Having a long-distance relationship isn't easy. Staying in touch takes extra effort, and not having your partner around when you need support can be difficult. So it's hard to imagine what life is like for Amiko Kauderer, whose boyfriend, Scott Kelly, is often not even on the planet with her. That's because Scott is an astronaut who spends months floating 400 km. above the Earth on the International Space Station!

Amiko works at NASA, which is how she got to know Scott. They met a few times, and after talking "for hours and hours" one evening, Scott finally asked her out. They've now been together for several years. However, Scott's job means he is often away. His first trip to the Space Station lasted six months. After that, he lived in space for a whole year to find out what would happen to the human body on a journey to Mars. On his first trip, it wasn't easy for Amiko to stay in touch. E-mailing involved a six-hour delay, but now it's almost instant, and it's also possible to videochat once a week. But there are some things that can't be done. "One of the things I miss most is holding hands," says Amiko. "We can connect by phone. I can upload pictures, but you can't upload human touch."

Other couples might have broken up in such a situation, but not Scott and Amiko. "We really appreciate a challenge because we know that in the end, we will be able to say, 'Yeah, we did that'." So, whenever you think your love life is difficult, just think of Amiko and Scott!

1 Look at the pictures and the title. Answer the questions in pairs. Then read the text and check.
